Part F: Reading Comprehension

Directions: In this part of the test, you will read two passages. Each passage is followed by some questions. Answer the questions by choosing the best choice (1), (2), (3), or (4). Then mark the correct choice on your answer sheet.

Passage 1:

Over the past decade, an abundance of psychology research has shown that experiences bring people more happiness than do possessions. The idea that experiential purchases are more satisfying than material purchases has long been the domain of Cornell psychology professor Thomas Gilovich. Since 2003, he has been trying to figure out exactly how and why experiential purchases are so much better than material purchases. In the journal Psychological Science last month, Gilovich and Killingsworth, along with Cornell doctoral candidate Amit Kumar, expanded on the current understanding that spending money on experiences "provides more enduring happiness." They looked specifically at anticipation as a driver of that happiness; whether the benefit of spending money on an experience accrues before the purchase has been made, in addition to after. And, yes, it does.

Gilovich's prior work has shown that experiences tend to make people happier because they are less likely to measure the value of their experiences by comparing them to those of others. For example, Gilbert and company note in their new paper, many people are unsure if they would rather have a high salary that is lower than that of their peers, or a lower salary that is higher than that of their peers. With an experiential good like vacation, that dilemma doesn't hold. Would you rather have two weeks of vacation when your peers only get one? Or four weeks when your peers get eight? People choose four weeks with little hesitation.

Experiential purchases are also more associated with identity, connection, and social behavior. Looking back on purchases made, experiences make people happier than do possessions. It's kind of counter to the logic that if you pay for an experience, like a vacation, it will be over and gone; but if you buy a tangible thing, a couch, at least you'll have it for a long time. Actually most of us have a pretty intense capacity for tolerance, or hedonic adaptation, where we stop appreciating things to which we're constantly exposed. iPhones, clothes, couches, et cetera, just become background. They deteriorate or become obsolete. It's the fleetingness of experiential purchases that endears us to them. Either they're not around long enough to become imperfect, or they are imperfect, but our memories and stories of them get sweet with time. Even a bad experience becomes a good story.

156- What is the primary purpose of the passage?

- 1) To introduce a psychologist and his areas of research
- 2) To discuss research on the factors that affect people's happiness
- 3) To explain why people tend to derive more joy from experiences than from possessions
- To elaborate on how to adopt an innovative approach to achieve happiness through experience

- 1) is a professor at Cornell University
- 2) is a published author in the journal of Psychological Science
- 3) has been counseling people on how to spend money on experiences
- 4) believes that experiential purchases provide more long-lasting happiness
- 158- The word "company" in paragraph 2 can be best replaced by
 - 1) firm
- 2) colleagues
- 3) organization
- 4) psychologists

159- It can be inferred from paragraph 2 that salary satisfaction

- 1) can be affected by peers' salaries
- 2) is not the most important factor in the workplace
- 3) plays a major role in one's overall job satisfaction
- 4) is higher when one can get a minimum of four weeks of vacation

160- Which of the following best describes the author's attitude toward "the logic that if you pay for an experience, like a vacation, it will be over and gone"?

1) Skepticism

2) Endorsement

3) Mocking disdain

4) Deliberate neutrality

- 1) significantly reduces the satisfaction derived from experiential purchases
- 2) is a reason why we should put an end to consumerism
- 3) is a mistake that we should acknowledge and avoid
- 4) is a common tendency among most people

162- The word "them" in paragraph 3 refers to stories

2) experiential purchases

3) memories

4) iPhones, clothes, couches, et cetera

Passage 2:

Walk into any school classroom and you will likely see a flat, rectangular map of the world sprawled across the wall. Generations of children have grown up learning that this projection is what Earth looks like. But does this flat map really reflect what our planet is like? Though designed with the best of intentions — to provide a detailed and coherent projection of Earth — flat maps are far from accurate; some areas look far bigger than they really are, others appear much smaller, and distances between various land masses are misrepresented.

"Every world map is distorted in some respect," Matthew Edney, a professor of geography and the history of cartography at the University of Southern Maine, told Live Science in an email. "It's a question of what you want," he said. "Do you want the regions to be shaped as they are on a globe, or sized as they are on a globe?"

The Mercator projection, created by Flemish geographer and cartographer Gerardus Mercator in 1569, was a revelation half a millennium ago and remains the most widely used flat depiction of Earth. This map was favored by navigators for centuries because it enabled them to plot courses in a straight line. In terms of precision, however, it leaves a lot to be desired. "On the globe, meridians converge as they approach a pole, and the lengths of parallels of latitude grow shorter until the pole. But, when mapping the Earth into a rectangle, the poles are stretched from points into lines the length of the equator. Every parallel is stretched to the length of the equator, so on the map, there is horizontal stretching as one moves poleward." The result of this is that some regions look far bigger on the map than they are in reality, while others are drawn much smaller. "This distortion is usually described in terms of the relative sizes of Greenland, Europe, Africa and India — the former two shown 'larger' than they should be, the latter pair much smaller. Again, all is relative."

To put this in context, Greenland and Africa appear to be similar in size on the Mercator projection, when in reality Africa is nearly 14 times larger, according to Scientific American. Similarly, Alaska is represented as being around three times bigger than Mexico, when in fact Mexico is around 1.3 times bigger.

163- What does the passage mainly discuss?

1) The history of cartography

2) The advantages of flat maps

3) The distortion in flat world maps

4) The best map projection of the world

- 164 According to paragraph 1, which of the following is highly inaccurate in a rectangular world map?
 - 1) Information of some places

2) Location of some areas

3) Shape of some areas

4) Size of some places

165- According to Matthew Edney, misrepresentation in a world map

- 1) can be avoided if necessary
- is not a matter of if, but how
- depends on the regions that we consider important
- 4) is not as problematic as the distortion found in globes

- 1) it was created centuries ago
- 2) it is still the most popular flat map of the world
- 3) precision is one of its most desirable features
- 4) it was a great aid in plotting navigation courses

167- In the Mercator map, areas are shown relatively smaller than they should be especially

around the equator

2) as one moves toward the North Pole

3) as one moves toward the South Pole

4) around the Arctic and Antarctic circles

168- Why does the author mention "Greenland, Europe, Africa and India" in paragraph 3?

1) To prevent a misunderstanding

- 2) To compare them in terms of their size and shape
- 3) To further illustrate the problem with the Mercator map
- 4) To point out that although they seem to be of the same size on the map, they are actually quite different in size

169- Why does the author mention "Scientific American" in paragraph 4?

- 1) To refer to the most prestigious scientific authority in cartography
- 2) To cite the source of the information given
- 3) To criticize the map that it uses
- 4) To question its data

170- Where would the following sentence best fit in the passage?

- "For most purposes, the latter is much more appropriate, but the aesthetic of the former is still culturally hegemonic."
- 1) At the end of paragraph 4
- 2) At the beginning of paragraph 4
- 3) At the end of paragraph 3
- 4) At the end of paragraph 2
