

Title: Iran Safety in 2020 when we talk about Iran safety, we exactly talk about what (Every Thing You Should To Know About Iran Safety).

Iran is much safer in terms of terrorist group activities than other countries, and travel to this country can be very enjoyable, and Iran's safety is guaranteed in this regard. Basically, if security is not established in a country, tourism will not be formed at all. So you can have a good experience traveling to Iran.

Sub-headings:

- Iran safety
- How much is Iran safety?
- How can we get sure about Iran safety?
- Iran safety for different traveler in all over the world.
- Iran safety for women travelers and tourists.
- Iran safety for bazaars.

Iran safety: The results of an international study shows that the level of Iran safety in the year 2020 to foreign tourists is higher than that of the populous countries such as France, China and the United States and has effective security services.

- The safety of different countries is rated in four colors, so that Iran safety for foreign tourists is higher than Turkey, Saudi Arabia and even Russia. The global tourism market in the New Year will be affected by the US presidential election, terrorist operations in some countries as well as conflicts in the Middle East.
- Iran is generally a very safe place to travel, so much so that many travelers describe it as the 'safest country I've ever been to', or 'much safer than travelling in Europe'.
- Violent crime against foreigners is extremely rare and, indeed, if you do your best to fit in with local customs, you are unlikely to be treated with anything but courtesy and friendliness – that applies to Americans, too. We have hitchhiked across deserts, stayed in the homes of strangers and left bags in restaurants and cafes without any problem.

- How much is Iran safety in airline flight?

Iran started the year with several rocky events. There were protests about rising fuel prices, a US drone strike on a major Iranian General, and the crash of a Ukrainian passenger flight.

- Understandably, travelers are concerned about their safety and are asking whether they should still travel to Iran. Considering the state of the Iranian economy, the country is doing everything it can to reassure travelers about their upcoming travel plans. Here is the best indicator of whether you should get on flight: If the captain feels safe piloting the plane, then you can feel comfortable. Flying, even to Iran, is still one of the safest transportation options available. The global average of plane crashes is far less than 1 in a million.
- Turkish Airlines is operating daily routes to Tehran. Qatar Airways, Emirates & Pegasus Airlines, have several flights a week. Other Operators such as China Southern also have several flights to Iran. The Iran Safety Airline Guard started operating in Iran in the year 1350 and until the victory of the Islamic Revolution, this mission was carried out by the security of the airline companies, Special Forces Rangers and ... We did not have a security guard in Iran from 1979 to 1986, but given that the country in the early years of the Islamic Revolution was involved in the counter-revolutionary war and imposed war, the sworn enemies of the sacred system of the Islamic Republic of Iran in order to exert more pressure. The fledgling Islamic regime of Iran has hijacked several unmanned aircraft and reduced the security factor in flights due to illegal interference.

- How can we get sure about Iran safety?

The head of the Iranian Chamber of Commerce announced the holding of a join seminar with other countries on confidence and reforming the insecure face in Estefan in March and said: "We must tell the people of the world that Iran safety is guaranteed when traveling to Iran."

- This is a famous sentence every tourist that comes to Iran says "Anyone who goes to Iran leaves his heart". When it comes to travel to Iran, they are usually exaggerated by Iran's unsafety. But it doesn't like that they say about Iran safety.
- Iran has a rich culture, but the reality is that people who are acquainted with Iran through the Western media stream a one-dimensional and stereotypical image of it in their minds: a country anti-Western with energy resources and a controversial nuclear program. This negative and bad judgment has discouraged many people from traveling around the world. However, expert tourists who have seen Iran are familiar with its wonders, celebrities, and safety of Iran.

As a result, we must obtain accurate information from reputable centers so that we do not become biased prejudgment about Iran safety.

The Iran Flight Guard in the picture below:

- Iran safety for different traveler in all over the world.

British nationals, in particular dual British-Iranian nationals but also persons only holding British nationality, face significantly greater risks of arrest, questioning by security services or arbitrary detention than nationals of many other countries. The security forces may be suspicious of people with British connections, whether through residency, family or employment. The risks are likely to be significantly higher for independent travelers than for people traveling as part of an organized tour.

- If you are involved in civil society, journalism or academia, or have links to any organization perceived as being anti-Iranian, either within Iran or elsewhere, you will be at greater risk and should be cautious. These could include individuals with links to institutions based in the UK, or which receive public funds from, or which have perceived links to, the British government. Since reopening in 2015, the British Embassy is aware of approximately a dozen incidents of persons holding British nationality being arrested in Iran, with reports of others being subject to questioning. In general, Iranian law on aliens recognizes freedom of entry into Iranian territory, but this freedom is not unconditional and requires some formality and regulation. The same thing applies to aliens who need special permits.

- While staying or staying, a distinction must be made between temporary and permanent residence, each of which has its own rules, but in general, this right is granted to foreigners by several conditions necessary to maintain order and security. Be. Holders of political immunity and political passports, such as government consular officers and their family members living with them in a family, on condition of reciprocity and those who enter the country with the consent of the Iranian government for foreign missions. Passport and Services Act. Residents do not have foreign citizenship. They do not deal with anything that does not harm the Iran safety and the safety of the facilities and safety information of the Iranians because the authorities pay great attention to Iran safety.

- Iran safety for women travelers and tourists.

The question is how Iran safety is for solo travel? For answering this question you should read this text. You will not regret it. In general, Iran is a very safe country to visit, so much so that many travelers claimed it is the 'safest country I've ever been to', or 'much safer than traveling in Europe'.

- Violent crime against foreigners is very rare and, as expected, if try to fit in with local customs, you won't be treated with anything but hospitality and friendliness.
- While visiting Iran, you might notice people staring at you, both men and women, but it is only a matter of curiosity, not bad intentions.

- Iran safety for bazaars.

Iranian markets are one of the most amazing tourist attractions that will surprise tourists and travelers with different colors, different flavors and aromas. There are many interesting subjects for photography, and most importantly photos, a place to connect with people from all walks of life who are wandering the market to exchange goods, greetings, trade, pray and simply do some Of them to do. Tea.

- The traditional Iranian market is a complex of shops, passageways, inns, baths and squares. It is not just about business activities but also a place for relationships. This is a place that provides an opportunity for people to discuss and exchange ideas. In fact, markets are for commercial, social, cultural, religious and political activities. For Iranians, the market seems to be Piazza for Europeans and Hirobe for Japanese.
- Iran not only welcomes traditional markets as a collection of shops and passageways, but also welcomes large centers and modern markets as the most entertaining parts of Iran's most important cities. The heart of the Iranian market is the city that leads to urban growth and has built a powerful social and physical network that has been built for ages. The Iran safety for markets is high and no terrorist operations have been seen so far. so; Have Fun guys.

